1. ACCOUNTING AND AUDITING PROFESSION IN RUSSIA

Accountants and auditors in Russia are different professions.

In Russia, regulation of accountants and auditors profession is subject to the three federal laws:

- «On Accounting» (adopted in 1996 and in 2011 adopted a new version of the law)
- «On Auditing» (adopted in 2001 and in 2008 adopted a new version of the law)
- «On Self-Regulating Organization» (adopted in 2007)

The law «On Self-Regulating Organizations» (SRO), has the following procedures:

- SRO is incorporated in the state register of SROs, by the Federal agency under the Ministry of Economic Development
- This is allowed for required and voluntary self-regulation of professional and business activities
- SRO must provide additional financial responsibility to service users or through insurance, or the formation of a compensation fund
- SRO has to establish standards of professional activities and ethical standards for its members and at least 1 time in 3 years to carry out quality control activities of the members,
- To obtain the status «Self-regulate», the organization must combine a significant proportion of service providers to be self-regulation
- The right of legislative initiative Self-Regulating Organization (the right to participate in the legislative process) on the subject of self-regulation.

Decisions of the Government of Russian Federation found that issues of self-regulation of the audit profession and audit activities are the responsibility of the Ministry of Finance, and issues of self-regulation of other professions and activities (appraisers, court-appointed trustees, accountants and others) are the responsibility of the Ministry of Economy. Under the Ministry of Economy created the Federal Agency of registration, inventory and mapping (Rosreestr) which is mandated to lead the unified state register of Self-Regulating organisations (SRO).

1.1. Every auditors activity from January 2010 are mandatory self-regulation.

Self-Regulating Organizations are state-accredited at the Ministry of Finance. Previous edition of the Federal Law «On auditing» included the accreditation of the Ministry of Finance of professional associations of auditors, without giving them the status of self-regulating.

Under this law, the Institute of Professional Accountants of Russia (IPAR) from 2001 to 2009, was accredited at the Ministry of Finance as a professional association of auditors. Currently, IPAR is only the union of accountants.

Since September 2009, the organization of self-regulate auditors pass the state accreditation of the Ministry of Finance. Qualification certificates of the auditors in the Russian Federation are the same, i.e. SRO auditors do not have the right to certify their members, and take in members of persons with a qualification certificate issued by one of evaluation center.

In accordance with the law «On Auditing» SRO auditors:

- Supervise the annual training of its members,
- Spend at least 1 time in 3 years quality control members for compliance with federal standards of professional work, standards and internal standards SRO
- Create a compensation fund in order to create additional responsibility of the professional community to the consumers of audit services.

As at 31.12.2013 in Russia acted:

4726 audit firm,

22 966 auditors (both employees and employers).

Currently, the Ministry of Finance of the Russian Federation accredited five audit SRO:

- Audit Chamber of Russia (Associate Member of IFAC) 7272 members, in force since 1995,
- Russian Collegium of Auditors (full member of IFAC) 4501 members, in force since 1992,
- Institute of Professional Auditors 2838 members, was estabished in 1998,
- Auditing Association «Sodruzhestvo» 6109 members, in force since 2009,
- Moscow Audit Chamber 6972 member, in force since 1992.

1.2. Accountancy profession and business activities in providing accounting services in Russia is not mandatory self-regulation, in the future also does not plan to introduce a mandatory self-regulation.

New draft of federal law:

- sets out the qualification requirements only in respect of accountants working in public companies (joint stock companies whose shares are traded on stock exchanges, banks, insurance companies, securities market participants). In other organizations can work as an accountant any person, including having incomplete schooling,
- does not establish a mandatory self-regulate profession, but permits voluntary self-regulation,
- determines that the methodology of accounting deals with authorized federal government (Ministry of Finance).

At present, Russia has the following major associations of accountants:

- Institute of Professional Accountants of Russia (a full member of IFAC) - about 70,000 members in 65 regions of Russia, in force since 1997, has its own system of certification of members,
- International association certificated accountants estimated about 3,049 members in 16 regions of Russia, in force since 2009, has its own system of certification of members (IPA separated from Russia in the conflict),
- Chamber of Professional Accountants and Auditors (St. Petersburg) - estimated around 2,500 members in 6 regions of Russia, founded in 1997 as an association of accountants operating from 2010 to 2011 has its own system of certification of members (members of the IPA evolved from Russia in the conflict),
- International Public Organization «Association of Accountants and Auditors» Sodruzhestvo» - estimated about 2,000 members in 31 regions of Russia, in force since 1989, has no certification system,
- «Association of Professional Accountants Sodruzhestvo» appeared in 2011. The number of members is not more than 500 people. Has a grading system similar to the evaluation conducted IPAR.
- «National Union Professional Accountants» appeared in 2014. The number of members is not more than 200 people.
- SRO «The National Institute of professional accountants, financial managers and economists» 2,058 members in 45 regions. Formed in 1999 and has its own system of certification of members.
